Robert Klein Gallery Brings Fine Art Photography to Millennium Place

New initiative places 45 original photographs at Millennium Place, creating an evolving gallery experience for residents and their guests

Boston, MA - October 15, 2026 - Robert Klein Gallery is bringing fine art photography to an unexpected setting: the ground floor of Millennium Place, a Boston residential condominium, where 45 photographs are now on view in a dedicated exhibition space within the building.

Invited by Millennium Place residents and management, Robert Klein Gallery has installed the inaugural exhibition as part of an ongoing program that will present new selections of photography three to four times each year. Each exhibition will include informative labels and QR codes, giving residents and visitors additional context on the artists, photographs, and their histories.

The initiative responds to an evolving art market in which collectors increasingly value convenience, accessibility, and opportunities to engage with art in everyday life. For galleries, it offers a way to introduce photography to wider audiences, educate prospective collectors, and encourage a deeper appreciation for living with original works of art.

"The traditional gallery remains an essential place to encounter art, but there are also tremendous opportunities to bring art into environments where people already live, work, and gather," said Robert Klein. "Photography is particularly well suited to this approach. It can transform a residential environment while giving people the opportunity to encounter exceptional works repeatedly, rather than only during an occasional gallery visit."

The program is designed to remain dynamic. With three to four exhibitions planned annually, the selection on view will continually change, giving residents an ongoing opportunity to discover different photographers, periods, and approaches to the medium.

The QR codes extend the experience beyond the physical installation, allowing viewers to learn more about individual artists and works at their own pace. In this way, the project pairs the intimacy of living with art with the educational resources traditionally associated with a professional gallery.

Founded in Boston in 1980, Robert Klein Gallery specializes in fine art photography and has represented and exhibited important photographers and photographic estates for more than four decades. Robert Klein served as President of the Association of International Photography Art Dealers (AIPAD) for 15 years and has long advanced the appreciation and collecting of fine art photography.

The Millennium Place gallery is a natural extension of that experience, bringing carefully selected original photographs beyond conventional gallery walls and into a community where residents can encounter them as part of daily life.

"Collectors don't necessarily want more barriers between themselves and art," Klein said. "They want to see it, understand it, live with it, and have access to information about it. This is one way of responding to that desire."

Artists currently on view include: Yousuf Karsh, Jeffrey Milstein, Arne Svenson, Julie Blackmon, Andrew Moore, Olivia Parker, Michael Wolfe, Wang Ningde, Chip Hooper, Tom Baril, Melvin Sokolsky, Jessica Backhaus, and others.

The exhibition is open to residents, their guests, and by appointment.
